

Cold Pressed Juice Market is estimated to grow with a CAGR of 7.50% during the forecast period

Cold-pressed juice is juice that is extracted from fruits and vegetables using a hydraulic press rather than centrifugal or single auger methods. Cold-pressed juices can be stored in the refrigerator for up to 3-5 days without pasteurisation or high-pressure processing (HPP), depending on the acidity of the juice and other conditions. This type of juice has been commercially produced for decades, but it has only recently found favour among the general population. These juices are generally more expensive than other types of drinks because they are produced entirely of fruit and vegetables with no added ingredients.

Analyst View:

Due to growing worries about various health conditions as well as the health benefits connected with ingesting these juices, demand for cold pressed juice made from mixed fruits and vegetables has increased dramatically. Cold pressed juices are made by pressing fruits and vegetables with a hydraulic press to obtain 100% juice. Furthermore, no additional heat or oxygen is used in the process, therefore no nutrients are wasted. Cold pressed juices, unlike other juices, do not lose nutrients, amino acids, phytonutrients, minerals, trace minerals, or enzymes during the extraction process. These reasons are boosting the global cold pressed juice market's mixed fruits and vegetables segment's growth prospects.
