Seaweed is a form of microalgae that grows in the world's coldest oceans. It has been used all throughout the world for millennia, but it is very popular in Asian cuisine, particularly in Japan, China, and Korea. Although seaweed can be used as mulch in the home garden, the extract is more fertile due to the absence of nutrients and other components found on the algae. Dried seaweed is used as a fertilizer, a soil conditioner, and an ingredient in animal feed. Minerals and vitamins in seaweed extract soften, soothe, and minimize inflammation while protecting skin's natural stability.
